IVO LAMMERS

I eat, sleep, and breathe hospitality. Ever since I remember, I have wanted to work in hospitality. My passion started growing up working in my parent's restaurant. I have strong social skills and a colloquial attitude towards my guests. However, I can be authoritative as well, when the situation asks for it. After working many years in a management role in the vibrant nightlife of Utrecht, I'm now looking forward to taking the next step in my career. My ambition is to work in a similar management role in the high-end hospitality industry.

Following the below tips and advice will help you make a great first impression every time. Personal Information The first section of your CV should always be your personal information. Spell check is great, but there are times when you have used a correctly spelled word in the wrong place. For electronic versions, sans-serif styles make for easier reading - Arial, Helvetica and Calibri are popular sans serif fonts. Font size is also important. You have things to be proud of, point them out in a clear, non-bragging way. Unfortunately, there is no one-size-fits-all as you will want to highlight different experiences and skills for each particular role you apply for. There is a lot riding on this first impression with up to 90% of CVs being rejected by recruiters in as little as 8 seconds. This does not need a title and is where you state your full name and contact details including address, telephone number(s) and email address(es). It is becoming increasingly common to only include the town and country in the address, however, you may also include your full postal address if you prefer. Instead of writing "I increased sales during this time", say how much you increased sales by - "I increased sales by 17% during this time". It is always recommended to quantify any achievements if possible. If you follow these tips, you can write a CV which stands out from the crowd and gets the right attention from the recruiter. It is no longer considered appropriate to include personal information such as marital status, religion, age or ethnicity. Next should be some form of introduction, career objective or personal statement. Do not be afraid of white space. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET If necessary, check a third time. White space can increase readability, and keeping the recruiter reading is your main goal. Check spelling, grammar and formatting. Then check it again. 11 or 12 point font is the most popular, however, it may be appropriate to increase or decrease slightly in certain situations. If you are printing your CV, serif style fonts are the clearest and easiest to read - Times New Roman, Georgia and Century Gothic are serif style fonts. You should also include all the details of any additional training or study you have undertaken if it is relevant to the position. Other Sections - As Required Depending on the position you are applying for, you may consider including some or all of the following: Certificates; Licenses; Publications; Honors or Awards; Technical skills; or Other skills. It is easier to update your latest achievements, certificates and training as they occur, rather than scramble to remember what you did and when if you find yourself applying for a position. It's not ok to lie or exaggerate on your CV. Each position should be listed separately and include the following information: Company name; Your position title; Duration of employment - the month and year you commenced to the month and year you finished. If possible, provide a reason for any gaps, for example, travel, maternity leave or studying. Education and/or Training Include the name of your University or College, graduation date and the title of your Degree(s). If you have any doubts at all, ask someone else to check it for you too. Don't leave large gaps in your work history. Clearly explain, in a sentence or two, why you are the best person for this particular job, or what experience you have to offer. Work Experience List your work experience in reverse chronological order, starting with your most recent or current position. It is unnecessary to include high school information unless you did not attend college. You will be found out at some stage and that could make for an embarrassing situation. It is unlikely you will fit all of the above information on just one page, so clear formatting is a must. Make sure you use a clear, easy to read font in an appropriate size. If still currently employed, use month and year of commencement to "present" or "current"; A summary of duties performed; and Any notable achievements. CCO-BY/Free-Photos/pixabay Your Curriculum Vitae (CV), or Resume, is your personal advertisement and chance to make a good first impression with a prospective employer. Make sure you use the same margins, font and size throughout. You should also provide volunteering or internship positions in this section. Fancy fonts look great on your personal projects but do not present a professional image in your CV. Taking time to research your prospective employer and adjusting your CV to meet their requirements will be obvious to the recruiters and may help you land an interview. Keep it Current and Accurate Keep your CV current at all times. It is not recommended to go below 9 point or above 14 point in the main body of your CV. Use headings, bullet points and short sentences. It can be hard to give ourselves credit for things we have done well but don't cross the line by making things up. For a highly-skilled, technical position, an additional page may be required. Remember to only include information if it is relevant. Formatting The perfect length for a CV will be argued as long as the earth turns, however, the general consensus is around two pages. Please also make sure any email address you provide is professional and appropriate. If your LinkedIn profile is accurate and up to date, you may also choose to include it in this section. Spell check will not single out "from" when you really meant to say "form". Customize Your CV needs to be customized for each individual position you are applying for. Understanding what recruiters are looking for in these crucial seconds will help you write a first-class CV which can help you move to the next stage of the recruitment process.
